This striking icon marking the wines of Seresin Estate represents a fundamental link between man and earth: the human hand. Michael Seresin, regarded as one of New Zealand's most important cinematographers, purchased 167 acres in the southern Wairau Valley in 1992. Guided by the expertise of winemaker Clive Dougall, Seresin vineyard uses only estate grown fruit - producing varietals expressive of the varying terroirs contained within Michael's land. Seresin's philosophies of biodynamic practice and organic techniques have been prevalent within the vineyard since it was first founded. His belief is that quality wines begin with healthy plants, fully able to express the soil and environment in which they grow, representing a healthy balanced state of nature. The estate is farmed biodynamically, encompassing not only the vineyards but the olive groves, fruit trees, native vegetation, pastoral land and vegetable gardens.
